Elle comprenait deux unités, les Tsukuba et Ikuma, les deux seuls navires qui furent terminés sur les six prévus initialement. Ils furent vite reclassés comme croiseur de bataille. Les croiseurs cuirassés de la classe Tsukuba furent ordonnés en urgence sur le budget de 1904 pour la reconstitution de la flotte pendant la guerre russo-japonaise et la perte imprevue du cuirassé Yashima par une mine marine en début de conflit. Cette nouvelle classe a été réalisée sur le chantier naval japonais de Kure et les observateurs militaires ont été surpris par la rapidité de leur construction. Toutefois, les progrès rapides de la technologie navale et l'augmentation des contraintes budgétaires sur la marine impériale japonaise durant la période immédiate de la fin de la guerre russo-japonaise, firent que le projet s'arrêta à la construction de deux unités.
