

A deadly new plague--or ancient shamans curse? As a new virus spreads from the Makah Indian Reservation, killing only non-natives, Dr. Peyton McKean races against time to save humanity--and himself! A lost grave is discovered at Neah Bay, Washington. Is it a Native American burial, as some Makah Tribe members claim--or are these the remains of a Spanish colonist of the 1700s, a man accused of romantic involvement with a young Makah woman? And how did the man die? Before these questions can be answered, a deadly new disease strikes. Raving mania and a lethal fever spread among non-Natives but inexplicably, Makahs are spared. The virus threatens to cause a worldwide epidemic of madness and death. Dr. Peyton McKean is called in to identify the organism and find a cure. He confronts an old Makah who seems to know more than he is saying about the origins of the virus. Steeped in shamanistic lore, Gordon Steel claims this is the legendary Lost Souls Disease, created by Raven to punish the Spaniards. Now he says it has been unleashed on the modern world to plague those who are blocking the tribes treaty-based right to hunt and fish in their traditional ways. As the death toll mounts, Peyton McKean must learn the shamans secret and find a cure.
